Occupation Parliamentarian

Summary

A member of the Australian Labor Party, Julia Irwin was elected to the Australian Parliament as Member for Fowler, New South Wales, in 1998. She was re-elected in 2001, 2004 and 2007. She was not a candidate in the 2010 federal election.

Details

Born and raised in Western Sydney, Irwin left school at the age of 16 to work in a bank and while studying at night. During the early 1970's she worked for a number of Trade Unions and participated in the equal pay campaign. In 1976 she was appointed electorate secretary to NSW Deputy Premier Jack Ferguson.

From 1989-1998, Irwin worked as an electorate officer for Federal Schools, Vocational Education and Training Minister, Ross Free (1989-1995) and Member for Fowler, Ted Grace (1995-1998).

Since entering parliament she was Deputy Chair of the House of Representatives Environment and Heritage Committee (1999 & 2000) and a member of the Joint Standing Committee on Migration and the House of Representatives Family and Community Affairs Committee.

Irwin is also a member of a number of Caucus Committees – Living Standards and Economic Development, National Security and Trade, Social Policy and Community Development and is Secretary of the Status of Women Caucus Committee.

Married to Geoff (Member NSW Parliament 1984-1995), they have two children and her interests are centred on the community and family.
